“ I used to see Mort whenever he needed help with his computer and he was always one of my favourite people to visit.

He always told me stories of his time in NY and always spoke highly of his family. It was always a joy to spend time with. He will be missed but not forgotten.

SO

“ I most remember cousin Morty from when I was a kid on visits to Long Island. He could be a commanding presence, but also down to earth. I much appreciate his police career in service to others. I was most impressed with his dog King, who I suspect was as highly trained as most members of the NYPD. Amanda and I wish we had stayed more in touch in your Florida days. We will miss you and will be praying for your family. RIP.

“ Mort was a gigantic Mort Experience! He reminded me of a huge but little boy---all in one package. A deep voice that commanded respect and made the little ones behave. Generous. Unique. A perfectionist. Fastidious and immaculate. He loved to have things in order. Always had the most wonderful aftershave on and forever in long pants, no matter what the temperature or the task at hand.

His bull-headedness served him well during his illness---I used to tell him he was an animal! :) It was a compliment! Unstoppable. Driven. A lesser person would have been gone years ago---but not Mort!

As he became less able, we'd find him sitting on the floor of his garage---like a bald-headed kid (from chemo) and continuing right on with what he thought needed to be perfect. The garage floor needed to be: Perfect! Until then...he'd return daily to sit on the floor and sand. It had to be to his specification! The may was in charge. So enjoy one of my favorite photos---the Big Kid, sitting on the garage floor. I'd say to him, "You know that you are not "normal", don't you?" He'd shake his head and laugh.

Here's to one of the most unforgettable and Lovable human beings on the planet. I'm sure he's finding something to sand or paint in heaven---is wearing long pants and had scrumptious aftershave on! Judie & CJ Chiappone (lucky neighbors)
